As my father's mother was Mary Austin Watt, George included some of the Watt family genealogy in his notes, beginning on page 7. To clarify those notes:

Earliest known: Hugh Watt, married Margaret Mills .

Their son, Hugh Watt (1774-1850) married Sarah Bohannon Kidd (1784-1863.)

Their daughter, Mary Austin Watt, (born 1805, I do not know date of her death) married John Haw, III, my grandfather.

Dear Cummins,

You will pardon me for my delay in sending you the Haw family tree, but at the time I did not have a copy of the Watt family tree and had to get it from Joe Call.

You will find enclosed herewith the Haw family tree which I have compiled from available data, and also the Watt family tree, which I think will furnish you with all the information available on the Haw and Watt families.

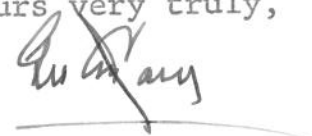

Mary is now with us, having just returned from Washington where she spent the winter with Frances.

As you know, George, Jr. is practicing law with me and is married and has a son, George Haw, III, who is now three years of age.

I was very glad indeed to hear from you and to learn that you are a grandfather.

Warfield joins me in love to you and Miriam.

Yours very truly,

Col. Joseph C. Haw

THE HAW FAMILY

Great great-grand-father of Joseph Brunning Haw

John Haw, I

John Haw, the first of the family to come to America, was born in Leeds, England, and immigrated to Gloucester County, Virginia, about the time of the American Revolution.

He first married a widow Richardson of Gloucester County, who died shortly thereafter without issue by him.

Later he married Elizabeth Carleton of King and Queen County.

In 1789, as shown by the old land books of Hanover County, several hundred acres of land, a part of the Studley Plantation, in Hanover County, was purchased by them and there was built the frame dwelling with basement, a first floor and a second floor, with dormer windows. This property named "Oak Grove" was from that time until after the Civil War the home-place of the Haw family.

The original house contained seven rooms and has brick chimneys at both ends. It still stands in the year 1956, and is now occupied by Mr. Otis Spiers, who purchased it from Virginia Haw, a daughter of William Haw, about fifteen years ago.

John Haw, I, was a man of some education as he was a surveyor.

Of the marriage there were born the following children:

Elizabeth Haw, who married Joseph Tyree

Catherine Haw, who married Joel Jones

John Haw, II, who married Sarah Tyree and Jean Richardson

John Haw, I, and Elizabeth Carleton Haw are both buried at Oak Grove.

John Haw, II

Great-grandfather of Joseph Cunningham Haw

1st Lieutenant of Co. I, and lost his leg in the Civil War. He was a Drilling Officer until the end of the war. At the end of the war he received

Of this marriage there were born:

1. John Haw, III, who married, Mary Austin Watt, of the Springfield farm near Cold Harbor in Hanover County, Virginia, a daughter of Hugh Watt, Jr.
2. Richardson Tyree Haw, who married Margaret Mills Watt, sister of Mary Austin Watt local politician and was Commonwealth's Attorney
3. Elizabeth Carleton Haw, who married Joseph Hooper of the church. He
4. Williamson Haw, who died at an early age Church for 71 years.

He died in 1930 at the age of 92 years in Hollywood Cemetery.

John Haw, III

Grandfather of Joseph Cunningham Haw

John Haw, III, born at Oak Grove in 1804, was married to Mary Austin Watt. He died in 1872 and both he and his wife are buried at Oak Grove. He was surgeon on Stuart's Staff.

Of this marriage there were the following children:

1. John Haw, who died in infancy, 15th Va. Regiment. Was severely
2. Sarah Elizabeth Haw, who married Charles Pollock Cross. She died at the age of 86.
3. Mary Jane Haw, who never married. She was a graduate of the old Richmond Female Institute, had a brilliant mind, was a school teacher and was also the author of a number of short stories, one of which earned her a $1,000 prize when published in a southern magazine during the Civil War. She also was the author of an excellent novel, "The Beechwood Tragedy, She died at the age of 91. Richmond Howitzers Artillery Co.
4. John Haw, IV, born 1838, a twin brother of George Pitman Haw. Trained in his father's shops. With Wm. Haw after 1867 operated a mill and foundry at Garlick's Mill in New Kent County, Va. Later farmed and died at his home, Piping Tree Ferry, at the age of 89. Was a brave soldier and was First Sergeant of Co. I, 15th Va. Regiment, in the Civil War. Had a great reputation as a farmer, a fox hunter and of a tournament rider. He was an interesting and attractive man, but managed to escape matrimony. Married Mamie Cunningham of Hampton, Virginia. A staunch churchman
5. George Pitman Haw, twin brother of John Haw, IV, born 1838. Trained in his father's shops. When the Civil War broke out he was Sales Manager of the business, soliciting orders and delivering the machinery. He, with his brothers, received what amounted to a high school education at the private school of Mr. Love at Linney's Corner in Hanover County about three miles from Oak Grove. When war came he volunteered with his brothers, John and William, in the Hanover Grays, afterwards Co. I, 15th Va. Infantry. He was elected

Edwin 1st Lieutenant of Co. I. and lost his left arm while leading his Company at the Battle of Sharpsburg (Antetam). Later was Enrolling Officer until the end of the war. At the end of the war he received his law degree at Washington College, now Washington & Lee. His diploma signed on June 21, 1867, by General Robert E. Lee, then President of Washington College, hangs in the offices of his law firm, Haw & Haw, now his son, George E. Haw and his grandson, George E. Haw, Jr.

Of this school there were three lawyers, a Methodist minister, two teachers and several substantial business men.

Family Tradition: Hugh Watt fled from Scotland to Ireland to escape persecution and settled at Vlenahin, Manover County in Ireland. There he married Margaret Mills. They had three sons, George Watt and Hugh Watt.

Haw's Shop

Just here it will be appropriate to say that John Haw, III was possessed of considerable mechanical ability and was also an inventor. He established on the end of the Oak Grove Farm a manufacturing establishment known as Haw's Shop. Here he operated a foundry, machine shop and a sawmill and manufactured farming implements, including plows, harrows, threshing machines, horsepower machines and suchlike. He invented the Circular Drum to thresh wheat, also a forerunner of the Circular Saw known as the Picker Saw (a metal bar with a tooth at each end revolving on a central shaft.) He later made it in the shape of a cross with four teeth. This location is opposite the present Studley Post Office, formerly Hawville.

and Sarah B. Kidd had five children of whom hereafter,

Sarah (Sallie) Kidd inherited from her father, Pittman Kidd, the farm in Hanover County about thirteen miles from Richmond called "Springfield." Hugh Watt and his family lived there.

A Clipping Cut from the "Watchman and Observer," 1851.

"George Watt died on October 1, 1851, at his residence in Richmond in the 32nd year of his age. He connected himself with the Presbyterian Church at Pole Green in Hanover in 1807. This church was organized by Samuel Davies and was at that time served by Rev. John D. Blair. In 1812 Mr. Watt united with others in calling Rev. John H. Rice, MD. to become their pastor and this band of fourteen was organized into the First Presbyterian Church of Richmond, having three ruling elders of whom our lamented friend and father was one. He was the father of eight children. Three of these as well as two who died in infancy preceded him to the grave. Signed W.S.W." (This George Watt was the brother of Hugh Watt, the son of the first Hugh.) (Note by M.H.M. This W.S.W. was no doubt Rev. Wm. S. White who married Jane Watt, one of the daughters of George Watt of this sketch. Wm. S. White and wife, Jane Watt White, are buried in the Lexington Cemetery.)

The following sketch was copied from an old number of "The Southern Planter." The sketch was written by Mr. R. A. Brock for many years the Secretary of the Virginia Historical Society:

"George Watt was born August 11, 1815, at Springfield, Hanover County, Va., the battleground of June 27, 1862. His father Hugh Watt was of Scotch Irish descent and a lineal relative of James Watt who first brought steam into practical use. His father was a farmer in independent circumstances. His mother, Sarah B. Kidd, daughter of Pittman Kidd and Mary Austin, was a native of Hanover County and was a granddaughter of John Austin, to whom the crown made some very extensive grants of land principally in Hanover County. George Watt was the youngest of five children. At the age of fifteen he was taken from school and put with William Wraythe, dealer in china-ware, Richmond. He did not like this vocation and for five years worked with his brother-in-law, John Haw, maker of all kinds of machinery.

Family Tradition: Hugh Watt fled from Scotland to Ireland to escape persecution and settled at Flenairm, Antrim County in Ireland. There he married Margaret Mills. They had two sons, George Watt and Hugh Watt.

According to Mr. R. A. Brock, genealogist and historian, the widow and her two sons emigrated from Ireland to Richmond, Virginia, in 1790. George Watt was a merchant and his younger brother, Hugh Watt, clerked in his store. George was a charter member of the First Presbyterian Church, Richmond and an elder. (See copy of a newspaper clipping below). This George Watt married Margaret Dunn and had six daughters and two sons of whom hereafter.

→ Hugh Watt, brother of George, married April 5, 1801, Sarah Bohannon Kidd, daughter of Pittman Kidd and his wife, Mary Austin, daughter of John Austin of Hanover County who served in the Revolutionary War. Hugh Watt and Sarah B. Kidd had five children of whom hereafter.

Sarah (Sallie) Kidd inherited from her father, Pittman Kidd, the farm in Hanover County about thirteen miles from Richmond called "Springfield." Hugh Watt and his family lived there.

 B. Kidd and lived at "Springfield," Hanover County. This plantation was the battlefield of some of the heaviest fighting of the Civil War, and was bought by the Battlefield Park Asso. in recent years. The dwelling house is riddled with bullets and many bones of those lost in battle are unearthed from time to time on the place. Miss Mary (Mollie) Jane Haw, daughter of John Haw and Mary Austin Watt,* wrote an article for "The Christian Observer," many years ago called a visit to Grandma's Home, in which she depicts the ravages of the armed forces during the fight of June 27, 1862. In this article "Cousin" Mollie Haw writes as if she were staying in the home of her grandmother Watt, but in reality it was Aunt Sallie Haw Brock who was staying in the home and helping to nurse her grandmother Watt. This was told the compiler by Miss Elizabeth C. Brock, who has in her possession a lovely old dresser which belonged to Sallie Kidd Watt, and which was one of the few articles of furniture left intact by the marauding Yankees. During this battle the dwelling house was turned into a hospital for the wounded northern soldiers.

Two of Hugh Watt's daughters, Mary* and Margaret Watt, married two Haw brothers, John Haw and Richardson T. Haw, and these two Haw families lived within a mile or so of each other. The John Haw home was known as "Oak Grove." The Richardson T. Haw home, as "Locust Hill." The drop-leaf dining table and ends in possession of the compiler belonged to Richardson T. Haw and his wife, Margaret A. Watt.

Mr. Robert A. Brock, who married Sallie Kidd Haw, daughter of R. T. and Margaret Watt Haw, drew a pencil sketch of "Locust Hill," which was copied by the compiler and is reproduced on Page 3 of the "Haw Family" notes.

Their daughter, Mary Austin Watt, (born 1803, I do not know date of her death) married John Haw, III, my grandfater.
